22ND WELTERWEIGHT ISSUES CHALLENGE

Benny Grant is perhaps the chief exponent of a sport with which the Twenty-second Infantry's name has not been recently associated, but in which the regiment takes quite as much pride as in baseball at which they star. The squared circle is Grant's stage, and he always draws a full house when he dons the gloves with an opponent. In fact Grant is heralded as perhaps one of the best welter weights in the army. He weighs at the ringside 145 pounds and makes his bow to the athletic fans of the District with a pretty record behind him, and a desire to "mix it" with any welter weight in Arizona over the ten or fifteen round circuit.

It is understood the soldier's camp is immune to Arizona's boxing laws, and that the matches are entirely in good order; and it is hoped there will be some real fast matches there in the near future.

Grant is open for challenges from any welter in the district. Less than a year ago the boy, for he is hardly 21, created a sensation in San Diego and Portland and was rapidly gaining a name over the coast when he enlisted in the army and has been on the border ever since.

McCaw, chief surgeon of the southern department said today. Health conditions along the border are excellent, and there are many vacant cots in the hospitals. Col. McCaw announced.

Five died during the week ending September 16, from injuries and there was one death from appendicitis. Sickness among the soldiers was reported as follows:

On September 16: El Paso, 1.7 per cent; Nogales, Ariz., 7 per cent; Arizona Points outside Nogales, 3.8 per cent; Laredo, 1.4 per cent; Brownsville district 2 per cent.

EAST INDIAN PLAY IS VEHICLE IN WHICH H. B. WARNER APPEARS

"The Beggar of Cowanpore" Is Name of Latest Triangle Release to Be Offered at the Orpheum Today and Friday

H. B. Warner, star of "The Beggar of Cowanpore," which appears at the Orpheum today and Friday, a new Triangle drama release, is thoughtful, and several other excellent things, rather than talkative. But if you strike the right key, you get a hearty response.

Mark Swain also appears in the program with "A Bitter Pill."

"There are really unusual opportunities for the actor in the photoplay," he said on a day last week when by happy chance an interviewer struck the key to which he was tuned. "Of course I don't mean by that opportunities for making money. They certainly exist, but all that has really nothing to do with what I mean."

"Deep in us all is the desire for creative expression, and in the artist, of whatever sort, this is a compelling passion. To him therefore the real opportunities of life are the opportunities for creation. And the actor comes nearer to creation in the present day photoplay than he does in stage parts."

"The traditions and methods of the stage are firmly fixed. An acting stage company devotes itself to expressing as exactly as possible the well considered plan or idea of the dramatist. He will often, indeed, dictate even the inflection of a phrase."

"The photoplay, on the other hand, is generally a free collaboration of dramatist, dictator and player. Each contributes his best thought to the actual building of the dramatic structure. There is the fullest and friendliest cooperation, so far as my experience goes, and the actor thus wins a stimulating and valuable experience in each picture that is far beyond what the run of stage work yields. He is really creating to an extent that has never before been allowed him.

"This, of course, may well be changed as the photoplaywright develops in purpose and in technical proficiency—when he learns to visualize his play as a whole and thus shapes each individual scene and each detail to his artistic goal."

"As that day dawns we actors will have to bow more and more to his will, but it is not here yet, and now, if ever, is our chance to give fullest expression to the best that is in us."
